

My Beloved Child,

Welcome to Month Six of your journey in the Garden Room. I have walked with you through every step that has brought you here. From the beginning I began gently turning the soil of your heart so that what was hidden beneath the surface could be seen and healed. You allowed Me to exchange beauty for ashes and to begin restoring what had been wounded or broken. You stood before the mirror and allowed Me to speak truth over your identity and remind you of who you are in My sight. You trusted Me as I began restoring the pieces of your story that once felt scattered or lost. In the months that followed I continued working beneath the surface of your life, loosening the soil, uncovering roots, and teaching you how to recognize what brings life and what must be removed. You have learned to listen more closely to My voice and to notice the quiet work I am doing within you. Now you are stepping into another important part of the journey. In this month I will help you understand the weather of the garden. Every garden experiences seasons of calm and seasons of storm, and your life is no different. Together we will look at the storms that pass through your life so that you can learn to recognize them without fear. I will teach you how to guard the garden of your heart with wisdom, how to set boundaries that protect the growth taking place within you, and how to recognize the environments and relationships that allow the seeds I have planted to flourish. As you walk through this month you may notice small signs of fruit beginning to appear. These are reminders that the work I have been doing beneath the surface is real and alive. The garden is not finished growing, but it is becoming stronger with every step you take. Continue walking with Me through this next stage of your journey and allow the garden to keep growing. I am with you in every season, and I will faithfully tend what I have planted within you.
